Treaty of Peace Between Austria and the Allies. INTERESTING COMMENTS OF THE AMERICAN PRESS.

NO. 49.

In the absence of the details of the treaty of peace between the allies and Austria, the comments of the press in relation to the close of the war and its results will be read with interest. The people of Naples evidently regard it as a betrayal of their cause, for they have already attempted a revolt and their example may be as follows: more successfully followed by the other States. Perhaps, lowever, there are ameliorations stipulated, which, under bricing all the Italian States, with the Italians to choose their own form of government and their own rules.

The trouble is in the delay. It is a habit of the tonsorial profession (all fashionable barbers are now professors,) to keep their customers in waiting by employing less force than is requisite to obey the calis of those who ratronize them. This is especially the case Saturday nights, when in most barber shops one must wait at least half an hour before his rough face land, judgment of nonsuit reversed and judgment for

While crowds are thus waiting their turns, amusing incidents often transpire. "First come, first served," is the invariable rule, and every one must wait his turn, no matter how urgent his case. Not long ago, an easythat the said John H. Combining speculation with amusement, the auctioneer offered to dispose of his "turn" at auction to the highest bidder. There was an instantaneous response, so he mounted a chair, and auctioneerred as follows:

"Gentlemen, my turn's next. John is now soaping during peace. While the money markets in Europe the head of that gentleman, and as soon as he's through were very little influenced by the demand for funds to the chair is made. The barber was just then topping off the customer in the chair, and but a moment more was to spare. "I go thirty," responded the stable man. "Forty," shouted the merchant. "Five to that," excitedly exclaimed the saloon keeper, "and I'll have it if it costs me a day's receipts."

"So'll I--fifty!" promptly responded the stable keeper, more excited than the rival bidder. OUR NATURAL BOUNDARIES .- A NAVAL OFFICER'S DEFINITION .- The following story, in the New Hampshire Patriot, is from the pen of ex-President Pierce: Capt. ---, of the United States Navy, was equally distinguished for his eccentricity of manner and his proficiency in seamanship. On one occasion, during a cruise in the Mediterranean, he so acquitted himself as to induce some English and French officers, who were endeprived it of its wonted elasticity, from the uncertainty rapidly. The stable man bid $1.05 when the barber exchanged, and international toasts and sentiments were being liberally indulged in, accompanied by corresponding potations, when one of the officers in her Majesty's service having become somewhat oblivious, remarked with characteristic brusqueness:
